Service Proposal for Open Data Portal for
The City of Anaheim, California
September 29, 2014

Mr. Trevor Bennett
IT Manager
City of Anaheim

Dear Mr. Bennett,

Junar appreciates the opportunity to have spoken with you and your colleagues regarding your interest in Open Data. Per your request, presented here is a Service Proposal for the City of Anaheim: enabling the City to quickly expand its transparency, citizen engagement, innovation and private-public collaboration by launching an Open Data Portal.

Getting Started

Included in this document you will find a one page description of our Junar Jump Start Services, for which the normal fee has been waived. We will assist you in organizing the datasets you want to publish, customizing the branding of your portal, and training your staff. This process consists of three steps: First, we will conduct a two hour session with you and your technical staff to discuss what datasets should be selected and other choices you have. Second, you will send us 5 datasets that we will prepare for the third step of training. The third step is another ~2 hour session with your technical team to complete the training and actually publish the 5 datasets. Yes, it is that simple: the process of demonstrating the system to you also serves as the actual deployment and training service. Finally, the fee for Jump Start Services is typically $2,000 but will be waived in this case as an expression of Junar's commitment to win your business and establish a long term relationship.
